

ABSTRACT

The presence of oxidative stress in a patient is determined by immobilizing tissue proteins onto a support, derivatizing any oxidized or nitrated proteins with 2,4-dinitrophenylhydrazine (DNPH), contacting the derivatized tissue proteins with anti-DNPH antibody or anti-nitrotyrosine antibody, then measuring the amount of immunocomplex formed.